With the main squad returning to action, head coach Pep Guardiola has lost to Mikel Arteta, his former assistant who helped him build the current strong Manchester City squad, for the ninth time.This victory also helps City narrow the gap with Arsenal to two points, but with two games in hand. In other words, coach Guardiola only needs to win one of the two remaining games to overtake in the title race, with only five rounds left in the season.De Bruyne and Haaland both shone when Man City beat their main rivals this season.

Picture: ReutersThe standout performance from the home side was Kevin De Bruyne and Erling Haaland taking turns to shine. While the Belgian midfielder scored two goals and created one, Haaland showed his importance to the Man City cause with a tireless display. Falling back to help out in defence when needed, De Bruyne then burst forward to open the scoring, showing the youngster's versatility. The commitment also helped Haaland open the scoring with a well-taken fourth, as he beat goalkeeper Aaron Ramsdale with a fine finish.The goal by John Stones in the 2-0 win of Man City, which was in the injury time of the first half, showed the impact of VAR in the game, which was seen as the climax of the season. After Stones got out, he received the ball from De Bruyne to head it past Ramsdale, and the referee blew the whistle for a goal. However, VAR was called in, and it was determined that Stones was still on Ben White with a distance that could be measured in centimeters.They controlled the game well after scoring early. Man City had 52% of ball possession, 12 times off target but still had 9 shots on target. If it were not for Ramsdale's ability, especially in the face of Haaland, Arsenal might have conceded more goals."Haaland showed his "shaved head" when
